

John Sutton V

Sir John de Sutton V (February 1380 – 28 August 1406)^[1] was the 4th Baron Sutton of Dudley^[2] and heir to Dudley Castle. He was the son of Sir John de Sutton IV, 3rd Baron Sutton, and Joan^[3] (d. 1408).^[2] John married Constance Blount (d. 11 October 1432),^[4] daughter of Sir Walter le Blount of Barton who was killed at the Battle of Shrewsbury in c.1402, whose death was immortalized by Shakespeare.^[5]

John V is a descendant of the first Lord Dudley, Sir John de Sutton II (c. 1310–1359) the first to be summoned to the Parliament of England as Baron Sutton in 1342.^[6] From 1397 to 1406, John V held lands derived from the Earls of Powis, upon the death of his great grandmother^[2] Isabel de Cherleton. In 1401, during the second year of King Henry IV of England's reign, John V did homage for the lands, including Castle Dudley.^{[7][4]} After John V's death, the Blounts had a stake in Dudley lands when his mother-in-law, Sancha de Ayala (d.1418),^[8] took custody of his first child John VI,^{[9][10]} who was age six, as well as being granted John V's valuable estates.^[11] Widowed, Constance was eventually sued by Robert Erghom for her dower in the King's chancery by which she defaulted several times on the King's grant of Dudley manor.^[12]

John V was succeeded by John Sutton VI, 1st Baron Dudley. By Constance, his other children included Thomas Sutton of Dudley, and Elizabeth Sutton of Dudley.^[13] He is also said to have had a child, Humphrey Dudley.^[5]
