The work of rebuilding the spool factory at Dover has progressed rather slowly for a week past, on account of delay in receiving the lumber from the mills at Oldtown. The machine shop, which will adjoin the main building on the east side, is up and is now being slated. The drying rooms are entirely independent from the large building, and in case of fire the latter building would be perfectly secure. The whole structure when completed will be much more convenient than the one burned and the working capacity as large.

WALDO COUNTY.
